TReO and Quickpass team up to combine Port Mann and Golden Ears bills

COQUITLAM - Crossing the Golden Ears and Port Mann bridges is going to get easier and more efficient starting September 1 when drivers begin to receive one TReO bill for both bridges. The new TReO combined bill means one less bill for drivers to pay and guarantees eligible customers the best rate on both bridges.

Most TReO customers are already set for combined billing. All they need is a TReO account, a payment method on file, and a TReO decal installed in their car and they'll start seeing their Golden Ears crossings on their TReO bill in September. If they're missing any of these things, they can contact TReO to register, update their account or order a decal.

Golden Ears Bridge drivers will be able to manage their crossings through their TReO account. Their trips will be listed by bridge and by vehicle so it's easy to see when and where they crossed.

The toll systems on the Port Mann Bridge and the Golden Ears Bridge have worked together since the new Port Mann opened in December 2012, but combined billing adds simplicity and convenience for drivers. Combined billing is a new and efficient way to reconcile tolls between TReO and Quickpass that keeps operating costs low for both organizations.

Each bridge will continue to have different toll rates, vehicle classifications, and promotions. Drivers who receive a Golden Ears bill from Quickpass will pay their bill to Quickpass. Drivers who receive a new TReO combined bill with crossings for both bridges will pay their tolls to TReO.
